

The People's Review of Prevent by Prof. John Holmwood & Dr Layla Aitlhadj 22nd February 2022

The People's Review of Prevent launched its report on the Government's Prevent strategy on 15th February 2022. The Report gives voice to the civil society groups and community organisations disparaged by the review conducted by William Shawcross, the current government-appointed reviewer of Prevent. Additionally, the Report points to multiple accounts of the harms to children and young people caught up in the Prevent machinery.

Key findings include:

- Contrary to the perception created by the Prevent strategy, there is no problem of “integration” of British Muslim communities and no basis for regarding them and their families with suspicion.
- Prevent is discriminatory in how it approaches far-right extremism differently from that of Islamist extremism. Far-right extremism is seen as a problem of individuals rather than communities.
- By defining as ‘extremist’ views and actions that are a normal part of a healthy and functioning democracy, Prevent undermines freedom of expression.
- Prevent targets actions and behaviours which are not in themselves illegal and for which there is no evidence that they have any relation to future terrorist offences.
- Prevent relies on profiling through Prevent Priority Areas that disproportionately target Muslim communities and poor communities; it also takes signs among young people of ordinary identity development and explorations in belonging as indications of ‘riskiness’, and sanctions their activism.
- Prevent undermines the proper safeguarding obligations of social workers, teachers and health professionals. It does so by bringing children and young people under a pervasive net of surveillance. This includes the creation of a national curriculum in ‘fundamental British values’ in England and Wales that is solely determined by national security interests.
- Prevent is an abuse of individual rights to privacy and the protection of data and information held about them, especially in the case of children.
- Prevent is overwhelmingly directed at children and young people where it represents an abuse of their rights and the obligation to make their needs and welfare central to public policy.
- There is no national security justification for Prevent's policies and practices in education or other services provided for them.
- Prevent must be abolished.

In his foreword to the Report, Professor Conor Gearty, QC, writes: “This report is an expression of critical engagement by those who are worried by the ever-expanding Prevent agenda. It is a voice that demands to be heard by all politicians and policymakers, especially those interested not only in critique but in putting the case for positive change as well.”

Professor Fionnuala Ní Aoláin, UN Special Rapporteur on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms while Countering Terrorism, writes: “It is my sincere hope that this Report will enable a broader and necessary conversation to take place about the operation of the current Prevent strategy in the United Kingdom.”

For further information contact the authors at preventreview@gmail.com. Contact Prof Alison Scott-Baumann for access to other experts at as150@soas.ac.uk, and visit our website for more information. The views expressed in SOAS ICOP Briefings are those of the authors and do not necessarily represent those of SOAS.