

Healthcare Facilities and Workers Cannot be Targets: An Immediate Ceasefire is Imperative by Dr Hina J Shahid (NHS) and Dr Daniel Hadley (NHS) (15th November 2023)

Since October 7th, over 11,000 people have been killed in Gaza. Two-thirds of them were women and children and almost half were in southern areas declared 'safe' by the Israeli government. 1.6 million people out of the 2.3 million Gazan population have been internally displaced and nearly half of all residential homes have been destroyed.

Despite healthcare facilities carrying a protected status under international law, Israeli forces are carrying out operations in Gaza's al-Shifa hospital – as we write. Since October 7th, over 200 healthcare workers have been killed – 16 whilst on duty. There have been 130 attacks on health facilities, 50 ambulances have been bombed, and 51 out of 72 primary care units are out of service. Furthermore, the only specialist hospitals for children, cancer and mental health have ceased operations. 23 hospitals have been ordered to evacuate in Gaza city and North Gaza.¹

Gaza's healthcare system has collapsed. Power has been cut and fuel for generators and oxygen has run out: newborn babies and intensive care patients reliant on ventilators are dying. Hospitals have exhausted essential medical supplies and currently, there are 50,000 pregnant women in Gaza: 5000 are due to give birth in the next month. The cuts in power, food and water supplies have caused malnutrition and poor sanitation: risk of waterborne disease and other epidemics have significantly increased. Yet, the hospitals remain overcrowded with patients and displaced people.

Forced displacement and collective punishment are illegal under international law and a crime against humanity: leading human rights organisations and lawyers are referring to this as ethnic cleansing. We are witnessing the politicisation of aid and weaponization of essential resources: we cannot continue to be witnesses to such deeply disturbing actions. We must act immediately.

We are also gravely concerned by the escalating violence in the West Bank: since October 7th, 167 fatalities have been reported – a quarter of these have been children. Furthermore, 2500 residents have been injured – 30% of them are children. Increased restrictions on movement within the West Bank have obstructed access for ambulances and mobile clinics, and there has been reduced access to cancer, dialysis and lifesaving treatments due to permit refusals by Israeli authorities.²

An unconditional ceasefire by all belligerents must be implemented urgently to protect against further civilian casualties and contain this humanitarian crisis; humanitarian pauses of a few hours are not practical or sustainable. Essential supplies must be made readily available to healthcare facilities and civilians.

It is clear that for these cycles of horrific violence to end permanently, a final resolution to the conflict based on equal rights for Palestinians and Israelis must be negotiated. The military occupation of the West Bank, the illegal expansion of Israeli settlements, and the blockade of Gaza must end. The grave violations of international law must be investigated and brought before the International Criminal Court: politicians of conscience must push for this. Furthermore, the UK Government must not be complicit in crimes against humanity; rather, the UK must lead diplomatic efforts to ensure that international law is enforced.

The SNP has tabled an amendment to the passage of the King's speech to call for an immediate humanitarian ceasefire: we urge all MPs to vote with their consciences today. Vote to call for an immediate ceasefire.
